Explore the Limits of Understanding and Compassion with Sage Theatre's Bea

Mick Gordon offers moving depiction of assisted dying plight

Calgary, AB – Sage Theatre presents Bea by Mick Gordon at Pumphouse Theatre, November 3 - 12, 2016.

Tickets range from $20 - $30 and can be purchased at sagetheatre.com.

Mick Gordon's powerful work, Bea, delves into the life of a young woman mired in illness. Trapped inside her own body, Bea (Makambe Simamba) relies on her mother Katherine (Shauna Baird) and caregiver Not Gay Ray (Paul Welch) to provide for her daily needs, both physical and emotional. But Bea – youthful, invigorating, hopeful – longs to end her suffering before it's all she knows. Bea longs to die.

First published in 2011, Gordon's Bea continues to be relevant today as Canadian provincial and federal governments grapple with Medical Assistance in Dying legislation, and the manifold implications for patients and their family, as well as the broader medical and religious communities. At times silly, sensual and shocking, Bea draws audiences into her world with her determination, humor, and sheer joy, while those closest to her struggle with the reality of her condition and her heartbreak request.

"In Bea, Mick Gordon deftly highlights the plight of chronically ill individuals from the most essential of perspectives: their own," says Jason Mehmel, Artistic Director, Sage Theatre. "The fictional Bea tests the limits of her mother's compassion by asking for a death filled with dignity and a life that was lead with purpose and gratitude, rather than one submerged in pain. It's a deeply moving depiction of an extremely difficult subject, and I'm so pleased Sage has the opportunity to contribute to this important dialogue."
